The Educators of Tomorrow

"We dare not have anything less than our best men and women as teachers."
Ralph McDonald

The long and twisting road to an education is one on which a person stands from the moment of birth and passes down slowly through every waking hour of his life. It is a road on which the past and present are always visible, but on which the future is constantly blurred by the recurrent bends of the pathway.

We, who are seniors in college, are only a short distance down this highway to eternity. In the past sixteen years we have observed and assimilated the secrets of life about us. We have reveled in the joy that springs from the realization of truth. We have known the thrill of the power to reason.

All these things have planted in us the seeds of wisdom; wisdom that will grow only with careful cultivation and loving care.

Now as we go forth into a world badly in need of the truth, we wish to share the wonders that are ours with those who have not yet discovered them. We wish to instruct others, to bring them to a fuller knowledge of life. It is with this purpose and the basic equipment of a liberal education, specialized training, student-teacher experience, and the will to follow our fellow-men, that we, the Future Teachers of America, seek our first position as educators.

College Misericordia has prepared us well; now it is our turn to prepare others. Thus, we present this Bulletin which includes all our qualifications to teach and is submitted to the superintendents of schools with the intention of making application for a position in their school districts.

We, the students of today, sincerely desire to be the educators of tomorrow.

"A teacher affects eternity. He can never tell where his influence stops."
Henry Adams

Dedication

We are grateful. We have lived only a few short minutes of eternity, yet our memories are overflowing with all the moments of happiness, which you, our loving parents, have provided.

You, God our Father, comforted us when we sorrowed and gave us the food from which smiles are made. You, Mary our Mother, extended your all-encompassing arms to welcome us back after youthful folly caused us to run away from Home. And you, dear earthly parents, have sacrificed for us beyond the point where words retain descriptive power. You gave us our lives, then yours.

So many times we wanted to say "thank you," but shied away when the words caught in our throats. So many times we wished to say "I love you," but halted in embarrassment. And so we have carried our affection within our hearts these many years.

Now, as we embark on a new life, may we humbly try to compensate for the thanks we should have uttered by dedicating this book, a symbol of our past joys, to you, our parents.

It was a hard fight, but we made it! After a full day initiation, some of us were even too tired to smile for e camera.

Party time! Our dramatic talents were put to an early t when we had to entertain the audience gathered in the feteria for the Hallowe'en party in October.

Signs of spring! With typical freshman energy, we walked ound the campus—when we were young. Pictured above nature-lovers: Alicia Gerlak, Ann Celusniak, Ann De nto, Elaine Collins and Barbara Bialek.

Come Along

Who will ever forget the adventure of going to college for the first time? There we were, standing in a sea of autumn colors before the main building breathless with excitement at meeting new friends, attending college classes, trying out for membership in every club on campus and ducking from the rampaging onslaught of sophomores who sought to "welcome" us in their own inimitable way.

They were most gracious guides. In fact, they dedicated a full day completely to us. For this special occasion we wore the most stylish outfits, including such indispensable items as turkish towel stoles, toothbrush necklaces and two different shoes and socks, all complementing our reversed blouses and skirts. Milady's coiffure was that of five tightly woven braids topped with green ribbons, a good trick for those with a poodle-cut.

Dandelion picking, an exercise period, deep waist-bowing at the sight of a sophomore and frequent proposals to workmen finishing the new auditorium were a few of the activities that made us sigh with relief when the clock struck four and we were free.

A few days later we found our most ardent torturers became our own buddies at the sophomores' party for us and every tedious minute seemed worthwhile. The seniors gave us a formal tea and the juniors gave us a party at which we were each given a big sister.

Soon we were invested in full academic costume and became true Misericordians. We were very proud of that day.

Then came the thrill of our first big social event at College, the Mission Prom. Blind dates were the order of the day and often the end result was, too. Few of us will forget the rustle of skirts and the deep breath that preceded our first glimpse of "Mister Big," who occasionally turned out to be about five-foot-one.

The Hallowe'en Party gave us our big opportunity to display all our theatrical talents. We whipped up a show with just the proper mixture of humor, drama and the dance. The whole affair turned into a comedy, but the audience was pleased and so were we.

The festivities that precede Christmas at Misericordia never cease to be impressive, but to us as freshmen, they held a special significance. We were participating in them for the first time. We learned to carol in every language, including Chinese; our presence as shepherds was invaluable to the Christmas play; and the yule log blazed to the melory of our song.

Second semester flew by even faster than the first semester, and the Sophomore Cotillion in February provided us with a chance to meet a few "eligible" boys.

Our first experience with a year-end play proved interesting when many of us who had never realized our shining talents were given impressive speaking parts with such priceless lines as "The soldiers are marching down the road."

After aiding the play to a successful run, we devoted our talents to the glee club, schola cantorum and orchestra in its combined concert.

With May came exams, frequent study periods at a Harvey's Lake beach and graduation. And as each senior marched down the aisle of the Irem Temple that Monday evening to receive her degree, we suddenly realized that we had been Misericordians for the unbelieveable span of a full year. We were no longer first year students, but rather bore the magical title, sophomores.

Freshmen

With Us...

Sophomore literally means "wise fool." We must confess this was an accurate name for our class during our second year at Misericordia. But that term is not as derogatory as it sounds.

Truly, we had a wonderful feeling of belonging. At last, there was a class lower than ours. It was with a great feeling of comradery that we greeted each other on that September day, trying to spill out all the events of one summer in a single breathless conversation.

We lost no time in using our wisdom and experience to advantage in doing our bit of freshman "welcoming." Selecting the initiation theme "for the birds" we prescribed a fashionable outfit featuring reversed clothing, spiral-seamed stockings, sneakers with blue and gold laces and pillow case-bookbags. Every silly command we dreamed up, the freshies performed with humble submission.

After what seemed like an eternity to the poor suffering frosh, initiation was over. We all selected the girls we wanted to be our buddies and honored them in a special way with home spun songs and a skit satirizing our recent "Campus Dragnet."

Upon our return we noticed a few changes to the campus, too. New carillonic bells sounded at seven, noon and six o'clock each day tolling the time of the Angelus. And it didn't take more than three minutes to discover that we now had our own tennis court.

We were "sophomores" in our classes, too. Suddenly, we began delving into the reason "why" a thing was what it was. After a few courses like General Psychology, Educational Psychology, Child Psychology and Mental Hygiene, we began wondering if we should invest in a nice soft couch and open our own office.

This year our residents were the hostesses at the formal Christmas dinner. The dining room was radiantly decorated in keeping with our theme "The Christmas Rose." Efficient waitresses in black dresses and rose-bedecked aprons served the turkey dinner. After the meal, everyone was ready for the entertainment which centered about Santa's recollection of his recent trip around the world.

Athletically, the sophomores did very well in 1954. Our class boasted six varsity basketball members, five cheerleaders, first place in the basketball intra-murals and second place in volleyball.

February was Cotillion time for our class. After choosing the title "Candlelight Serenade," we planned decorations which carried out the theme in black and gold. And on Friday evening the Hotel Redington was filled with the muscial notes of Jack Melton's orchestra.

In the spring, our home ec'ers proudly displayed their home-sewn ensembles in the annual fashion show.

Springtime witnessed more noteworthy events. Our novice debating team scored a resounding victory at the Dickinson College tournament. Misericordia celebrated its 30th birthday. Joan of Arc was presented by the students at the Irem Temple. And the entire student body grieved over the loss of our beloved Bishop Hafey.

Soon the final activities for the seniors were in progress and we got a chance to bid a festive farewell to our big sisters at the luncheon sponsored by the Freshman and Sophomore classes.

Then, the seniors' big evening arrived. As we sat in the audience watching each graduate receive her degree hood, we automatically inherited the title of upperclassmen. We were now the Junior class.

Sophmores

Freshmen beware! Mustering our forces behind McGan Hall, we were eager to "welcome" our young friends t college. Joan Duffy was on hand to offer suggestions.

In a more academic vein! We participated in t freshman investiture ceremony and procession through t grotto in a radiant river of autumn leaves.

Seldom-seen pose! We paused for this picture be shocking the rest of the Hallowe'en partiers. St. Peter, a Sue Holahan, led this band of angels, accompanied by uninvited guests, Trudy Sheridan and Mary Lou Davis.

Atlantic City here we come! The other contestants were not too frightened by this group of old-time bathing beauties posing for the Hallowe'en competition.

Homeward bound! Six of the home economics students who completed their practice in Rosary Hall pause before dashing home for some rest and relaxation.

The loveliest night of the year! Every committee head was smiling on the evening of the Junior-Senior Prom. Especially happy at the success of the affair were co-chairmen Mary Lou Davis and Shirley Switch.

Through Our

Junior year brought with it a series of changes to the campus as well as to our lives. Educationally, we marched forward in our professional studies toward a teaching career and physically, the residents marched up the hill from Rosary Hall several times daily. All the rooms in McAuley and McGann sparkled in various pastel shades and the first floor hall of the administration building had a complete face lifting.

In the fall, College Misericordia formally welcomed the new head of the Scranton Diocese, His Excellency Bishop Jerome Hannan, D.D.

Two parties highlighted the early school months. The big sister party, which took the form of a weiner roast, featured some sage counseling to the freshmen. At the Hallowe'en party, we made our appearance as bathing beauties, 1920 style.

This year Santa Claus couldn't come fast enough for the juniors because he was to carry a present which we had anticipated for two-and-a-half years, our rings. Just before vacation he arrived in a jeep from the Dallas post office and delivered the long awaited parcels which we had on our fingers even "ere he drove out of sight."

After our return from mid-term vacation, we found that we had inherited a legacy of leadership from the seniors. Duty had called them from our portals to classrooms all around the Valley where they were serving their teaching apprenticeship. Our new-found glory held only one drawback. We realized we would be the next student-teachers.

The beginning of the first semester brought an end to the home economics students' stay at Rosary Hall for their six-week practice period and also freed every resident junior from the temptation to become the uninvited guest at dinnertime.

All the leading roles in the production "Murder in the Cathedral" went to juniors this year since the seniors were devoting their talents to the youth of America.

Early in May our campus was favored by a visit from lecturer Bella Dodd who spoke on her past life as a Communist and the terror she lived in after her resignation from the party.

May was a full month for us. Observing every senior activity brought us the feeling that our own graduation was not too far away. And members of our class were elected to the school's leading offices. Katherine Herman became Student Council president and Mary Stockman was made head of our class. Janice Curry was chosen vice-president of the Scranton Region in N.F.C.C.S.

For the beautiful crowning ceremony, Joan Duffy was chosen as May Queen. At a later election, the student body selected Connie Kozel to reign as Miss Recordia at our Junior-Senior prom.

On that warm May evening we waltzed to the music of Lee Vincent in an Undersea Fantasy, illuminated by myriads of sea shells, fish nets, a treasure chest teeming with gifts for the queen and two mermaid-mural attendants hovering over her majesty's gigantic shell throne. It was truly a night to remember.

Monday night we all marched into our front row places in the Irem Temple and watched as the seniors received their degrees and honors. But the enchanted moment for us was swift and completely exhilarating. A single organ chord and a swift push of a tassel from the back to the front of our academic caps brought into reality a dream that had seemed so terribly remote. As we sat proudly back into our seats, we were College Misericordia seniors.

Juniors

College Years

We made it! After three years of looking up to the class above us, we suddenly realized that we had reached the epitome of positions. We were seniors.

After carefully selecting our courses for the first semester to make sure we had the right credits to graduate, we discovered our first few weeks were to carry an added attraction. Miss Anne Culkin conducted a charm course to help us perform every social grace from making proper introductions to sipping our tea.

We found good use for both "charms" at the Senior Tea which we gave to welcome the new freshmen. Some of our most stalwart entertainers performed to the packed cafeteria audience.

Our next class activity was the Harvest Moon Ball, the last prom we would sponsor at Misericordia. On October 21, the King's College gym was transformed into a blaze of autumn colors with multicolored streamers cleverly disguising the bleachers. Pumpkin-covered tables lined the dance floor where a scarecrow stood amid a fenced-in field of hay. And, clinging to the basket at the far end of the gym, the smiling orange harvest moon presided regally over the whole scene.

The old harvest moon stayed full long enough to hitch itself to a post in the Misericordia gym on the evening of the freshman-sponsored Hallowe'en party. The senior residents, following tradition, dressed with a single theme in mind. This year, we were a circus troupe replete with eight-piece band, a pink elephant, a bareback rider on a two-headed horse, and other three ring residents.

The first semester months were filled with the official duties of high office-holders in all the various organizations on campus. There were meetings to conduct, projects to plan, publications material to get to press and with all a wonderful feeling of being important, wisely coupled with the sobering effects of responsibility.

Practice for the play saw many veteran senior actresses in title roles. Everyone performed in fine style since it was to be her last appearance in college dramatic production.

The first in the sorrowful series of senior farewells, the residents' Christmas dinner, was dedicated to our class. The sophomore-sponsored program featured a musical narration of Christmas legends. Later, when we all rose to sing the traditional "When You Wish Upon a Star," the song was accompanied by a few tears.

Christmas vacation sped away as did the few weeks preceding mid-term exams. We never remember wishing so furiously for time to crawl and watching it contrarily speed by. We were to be student-teachers.

Our knees were knocking just a bit on the first day of our professional career as we met our principals, our master teachers, and, amid groans, cheers and a few wolf whistles, our students. The sight of them terrified us at first and we were most content to sit in the last seat of the last row and "observe."

But, all too quickly, the fateful day came when our master-teachers handed us a piece of chalk saying "Go to work." Yet after a week, we felt completely at home and were absolutely fascinated with our vast store of knowledge.

Now, the campus is groaning under the pains of growth. From a gigantic excavation behind McAuley Hall, a new building is stretching its beams toward the sky. The recreation hall is complete and waits only for a warmth of occupants. Misericordia is a college with a prospective future even greater than its successful past.

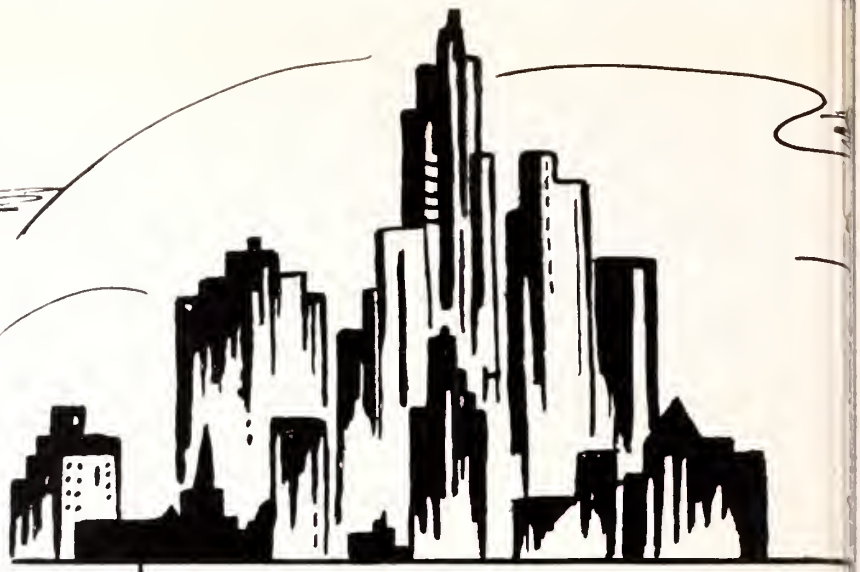
We, the seniors, are proud to claim it as our Alma Mater.

Seniors

Stand your ground! Mary Lou Walsh scowls and Janet Michaelis just chuckles at the sight of Ursula Farrell with her "hot plates," prepared for the Christmas play.

The pause that refreshes! Our student-teacher emissaries to Exeter High School take time out from the classroom for a visit to the school nurse (back row).

The winners! Proudly displaying their award for placing second in the debate at St. Peter's College are debaters: Mary Carey, sophomore; and Helen Marie Krazinski, Janice Curry and Mercedes Finn, seniors. Mercedes won her trophy for second best speaker in the tournament.



Foreword

Misericordia's portals have seen many changes in the past thirty-two years. They have witnessed the great growth and development of a young educational institution, the tremendous achievements of the Sisters of Mercy and the greatest miracle of all, the metamorphosis of thousands of Catholic girls into Catholic young women.

We, of the class of '56, have been privileged to play a small part in this wondrous scene of expansion. Our history, too, is a story of growth—growth of mind and of spirit. We have learned the story of life and conquered the mystery of death. We possess the keys to our souls.

For these and all the great benefits of a College education, we owe an unpayable debt to College Misericordia. And as we pass her portals for the last time as students, we take with us an undying loyalty to the institution that has fitted us for the future—our Alma Mater.
